Yet another Trump divorce is headed for court today, where The Donald's baby brother will face off against his wife of 25 years.

Blaine Trump filed for divorce from Donald Trump's sibling, Robert Trump, last year, after Robert allegedly cheated on her with a woman he's now living with.

The pair are slated to make their first appearance together since then in open court this morning for a hearing before Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Saralee Evans.

A source said real-estate heir Robert will argue that the court fight should be moved to upstate Millbrook, where they both have homes.

The hearing will be just the first round in what's expected to be an exceptionally ugly split.

Robert doesn't have his brother's marital sense – the couple didn't sign a prenup, sources said.

That paves the way for Blaine, who's become a philanthropic force in the world of high society, to go after half of his estimated $200 million fortune.

"He'll argue it's all inherited, but he was running his father's real estate business for 20 years," the source said.

Blaine is well-armed for a down-and-dirty court fight. Her lawyer is Robert Stephan Cohen, who represented Christie Brinkley in her nasty divorce from Peter Cook.
