Re: Eros International Plc v. Mangrove Partners et al., No. 653096/2017

Dear Mr. Anderson:

I represent Eros International Plc (“Eros”) in the above-referenced lawsuit, pending in the Supreme Court for the State of New York, New York County.

As you are no doubt aware, you, ClaritySpring Inc. and ClaritySpring Securities LLC (together, “ClaritySpring”) were each named as defendants in this action on September 29, 2017. On October 2, 2017 – after Eros commenced this lawsuit – you (or someone at your direction) deleted all tweets pertaining to Eros from your @claritytoast Twitter account. We are also aware that you admitted to deleting this material in yet another tweet that you subsequently deleted.

As a party to a legal proceeding, we assume that you and ClaritySpring have taken all appropriate steps to preserve this information (and any other relevant evidence) prior to its deletion. In the event that you have not, then such destruction amounts to the spoliation of relevant evidence and breaches your duties in this lawsuit under New York law.

Eros thus demands, despite any company policy or practice to the contrary, that you and any of your employees, agents, representatives, attorneys, or any other entity as to which you and/or ClaritySpring may exercise influence or control, immediately cease your destruction of information potentially relevant to this lawsuit, including without limitation:

- All communications with any other defendant in this lawsuit regarding Eros, including but not limited to communications regarding the commencement of this action and your subsequent destruction of potential evidence on October 2, 2017;
- All communications that you posted to or sent through any social media and other websites, including Twitter or LinkedIn;

KASOWITZ BENSON TORRES LLP

- All of your and/or ClaritySpring's transaction records evidencing trading in Eros securities, including but not limited to any short transactions that you and/or ClaritySpring facilitated on behalf of yourself or any other party;
- All other pertinent evidence, including but not limited to (i) paper records; (ii) electronic records¹ (e.g., electronically generated documents in Microsoft Word, PowerPoint, Excel, Access, etc.); (iii) electronic mail stored on all cell phones, computers, tablets, laptops or other electronic devices; (iv) audio or visual records; (vii) text messages; and (viii) telephone records.

Your duty to preserve also extends to the metadata of electronic records, and you must take steps to ensure that metadata, too, is not altered or destroyed. In that regard, all emails and text messages should be (i) printed out and maintained in a hard copy file, and (ii) saved to a folder where they will not be automatically deleted or altered. You should ensure that no documents are destroyed, altered or modified and no additions or changes should be made to any relevant or potentially relevant documents or data. When in doubt whether a particular item should be preserved, you should err on the side of preservation.

Your duty to maintain and preserve extends to anything that currently exists, as well as anything created, generated or discovered after the date of this letter.

We also request that, with respect to ClaritySpring's corporate email, you preserve documentation, whether it be handbooks or memoranda, sufficient to show ClaritySpring's computer and/or email "use policy," in effect from January 2015 to the present, or any other policy that provides any protocol, rules, instruction or guidelines for permissible and/or prohibited use concerning company email, computer network, intranet or Internet access, electronic devices, hardware and computer components, or software and computer files.

Nothing herein is a waiver of any of Eros' rights, including its right to pursue all available penalties and sanctions for your apparent destruction of relevant evidence.

Sincerely,

Stephen W. Tountas

¹ For these purposes, "electronic records" should be construed in the broadest sense possible and includes all removable electronic media used for data storage in connection with your computer systems, such as magnetic tapes and cartridges, magneto-optical disks, floppy diskettes and all other media, whether used with personal computers, minicomputers, mainframes or other computers, including those containing backup or archived data sets.
